PACE-grant perspective. The purpose of this paper is to describe the implementation of the experimental component of the PACE (The Physiotherapy, Acupuncture and Clinical Exercise) project within three NHS trusts: four sites (two sites and four sites in each) that took part in the trial. The participants of this phase of the study were 11 clinicians working in the three participating trusts. The aim of the paper is to outline the implementation of the PACE project and to describe how it may assist clinicians to deliver their services more effectively. The findings show that a framework for organisational change can be successfully adapted for use in NHS clinical settings.

Q: Can a system admin be in the same room with an active user? I have access to a piece of software that can expose sensitive user information to a system admin. How can I limit access to the information to the system admin only without being too obvious in my communications with the user. How can I limit access to sensitive information to the user in such a way that I'm not the only person accessing it? A: We do have a change to ensure that our admins are in a separate room than the user they're giving access to. A: If you can give a system admin the privileges to administer the system, just having them in the same room with the user is a simple way to do this.
