Q: If a, b are positive and $\frac{1}{a} + \frac{1}{b} = 1$ and $\frac{1}{a} = \frac{1}{b}$ then $a = b$? This is the statement which I found in my first book. I have tried to solve it for myself but I didn't get any luck. Could someone give me a hint for solving this? A: Squaring both sides we get $a^2 + 2ab + b^2 = 1 + 2ab$ Multiplying by $2a$ and adding to the equation $2a^2 + 4ab + 2b^2 = 2a + 2b$ $a^2 + 2ab = a + b$ Divide both sides by $2ab$ $a^2 + a = b + a$ $b = \frac{a^2 + a}{2}$

Practical tools for: development, review, and evaluation of sustainable water supply and sanitation systems. Introduction A key focus of "Sustainable Water Supply and Sanitation Systems: Green Building Blocks for Health and Livelihood," a 2012 World Bank report, is the need to support national efforts to improve water quality and sanitation while striving to achieve universal coverage. This article examines ways to help national governments meet these goals. There is a wide-ranging range of products and services, and regulators and practitioners need to understand the pros and cons of each to select the most appropriate options, as well as their limitations and working conditions. Thinking about greening the delivery of safe drinking water and adequate sanitation requires developers, planners, and regulators to address several critical components of a project: Health and social costs and benefits of the outcome at the population level Health and social costs and benefits at the household level Costs and benefits of water and sanitation services by source and delivery system Costs and benefits by consumer group in terms of access and affordability (See Table 1 below) Similarly, planning for affordable water supply and sanitation systems requires the following considerations: How to ensure that water and sanitation schemes are affordable to the mass of the population How to realize the economic benefits of investments in water and sanitation for the

When government investigators confronted Dmitry Guzansky, the most senior Russian banker at the heart of a high-profile money-laundering probe, he agreed to turn over a large sum of cash on the condition that he be allowed to fly home, let alone face the music. President Viktor F. Yanukovich has announced a cabinet reshuffle and made a surprise appointment of Yakovlev as Russia's "first minister of finances." Apart from giving him a portfolio that doesn't officially exist, Yakovlev's appointment is a political move, Putin's way of rewarding an ally who helped him regain the presidency earlier this year. Where do the people of Transnistria (known officially as the Pridnestrovian Moldavian Republic) stand on the matter of Tashkent Six? Does Transnistria's government support "the peace-loving people of Uzbekistan" or does it call for the immediate release of the "political prisoners of Uzbekistan"? More than a year before the final fall of the Soviet Union, Ukraine's President Leonid Kravchuk, 35 years a Soviet loyalist, was preparing the country for a new era as an independent republic. On Dec. 8, 1990, he spoke to a gathering of military officials, who were about to be sent home. More than a decade after the final collapse of the Soviet Union, international financial institutions are saying that Russia is in violation of the Commonwealth of Independent States' common accord on taxes for the gas it sells to its neighbors, in particular Ukraine. As well as recording vocal performances, engineers also monitor the surrounding
