What's New in the?

Did you know that, on average, a refugee or asylum seeker in Australia was convicted of a crime at a rate of 54 per cent? That's according to a report published in May 2018 by the Australian Institute of Criminology. In 2011, the rate was 70 per cent. Another report produced by the Melbourne Institute in 2012 stated that a refugee, on average, spent about $90,000 more than an Australian in the course of their lifetime. And the bulk of the savings came between the ages of 16 and 30. All of this is to say that if it is assumed that migrants are net contributors to our social and economic system, then we must ask why Australians born in Australia are more likely to pay taxes than migrants. In the words of Department of Immigration and Border Protection Commissioner Michael Pezzullo, 'we're a net contributor, not a net importer'. What about the claim that migrants can't find work? A study conducted by IBRIS in 2005 found that, despite the enormous costs involved in migration, not only is it possible for migrants to find work but that migrants are more successful than the average Australian in finding employment, although they are not immune to unemployment. In 2012, the Social Policy Research Centre (SPRC) confirmed that if migrants can find work then there is no such thing as 'unwanted' migrants. The Centre found that, unlike the oft-repeated trope that the number of 'illegal' migrants has increased over the past decade, what has actually happened is that the number of migrants is on the rise while the number of 'unwanted' migrants has remained steady or even declined. Yet despite all of this, Australian politicians and commentators continue to talk about migrants as though they are a scourge – a term to be avoided at all costs. Why? Simple. Refugees, asylum seekers and migrants contribute to the community in ways that overburden taxpayers, including the cost of law enforcement, hospitals and nursing homes. But this is a great reason to welcome them and make the rule of law apply to all, not just to the unfettered few. Last year, an Ipsos poll stated that the Rudd government was extremely unpopular among more than three-quarters of Australians. With the government in full panic mode over budget deficits and job losses, the Coalition launched a fresh round of scaremongering with its abysmal immigration policy.
