This is the only year that FIFA added motion capture data from real footballers to the game. FIFA 17 for Xbox 360 and FIFA 18 for PlayStation 3 both included motion capture, but all the motions were still generated by in-house programmers. Even with the many new animations that can be created with the integration of motion capture data, the use of the additional data is not an end in itself. EA Sports wants to put the player's body in a real-life situation and that requires a lot of testing. This is why "HyperMotion" is a new step in the evolution of in-game sports, rather than a new game feature. The integration of motion capture data enables a more realistic and photorealistic game experience. The outcome is that players' actions are more believable, they are tracked more accurately and they react to the ball quicker. When EA first demonstrated "HyperMotion" back in 2011, players were given a copy of the game and asked to play it in real life against motion capture data collected from real footballers. What players noticed immediately was that they could feel the action come into play much faster, and the ball did not float but descended onto the ground. The ball also hit the correct area of the player's head. Many players were overjoyed when they realized that this was really happening in the real world. The in-game presentation of "HyperMotion Technology" is designed to make the game accessible to a wide audience and to "mobilize the virtual experience for you," according to the official FIFA website. The in-game presentations include first-person cut-scenes, composed for specific player types. All of them are used when the player controls the ball during a game situation. Then, when the gameplay is very intense, the user is presented with an interactive focus-field that pops up in the middle of the screen. The animation is also accelerated in order to increase the sense of realism. It is important to note that it is the combination of the motion capture data and the enhanced in-game graphics that offers the most realistic presentation and gameplay. The data that is collected from player movement in real life is only used for the in-game animations. The new "HyperMotion Technology" is especially notable because it allows players to share with others the feeling of playing a real match. It is accessible to every type of player and does not

You can play FIFA on your PlayStation®4, Xbox One, Xbox 360, PlayStation®3, Wii U, Windows PC and Mac. Reinvented Gameplay - New dribbling, shooting and defending controls, plus improved ball control. Master the new interactive, player movement-driven Dribbling system and adapt to new shooting controls with pinpoint precision. When it comes to defending, EA SPORTS™ FIFA is your foot into the door. New Defending controls, responsive camera, and a new defensive AI that prioritises players to maximize ball control. This results in players' focus on defending, rather than their positioning in relation to one another. Dribbling is more intelligent and you will move better and run through defenders. The game's controls have been reinvented for the next generation and kept as true to the original game's classic feel. Plus, FIFA's new Attacking Intelligence system allows players to create more goalscoring opportunities using intelligent shooting. Master dribbling controls and push opponents in the direction you want them to go. Position yourself around a defender and shoot to beat him. Read goalkeepers' movements and chip over the keeper's head. Finish with a crisp, first-time shot to send the keeper the wrong way. Defending - Whether you play as Attackers or Defenders, EA SPORTS FIFA creates a new defensive AI that sees you play a better 1v1 match, controlling your player's position based on their movement. In addition to individual positioning, defending AI prioritises close control over spacing and will collect the ball in a better location on your pitch. And when defender presses the pass button, use this as an opportunity to attack by attacking one-on-one with the Defender. New To Live - The Dynamic Kick System gives a wider range of kicks, including Standard, Low and Mid range, while kicking with any part of your foot delivers a new air-style kick that opens up a wider range of possibilities, with the snap move and flick to action more often than ever before. The new kick styles vary based on pitch type, location of ball and opponent conditions. Player Intelligence - Tactical Thinks. With complete 360° vision, players think like a manager, anticipating what opponents will do before they do it. Uncover hidden balls from new free kicks, semi-volleys, and corners. With the new player intelligence system, players will think like managers when it comes to choosing who to take up and how to mark them.
