Gary Johnson may have been the Libertarian candidate in 2012, but he's running for president again in 2016, and as he demonstrated in his opening night speech at the Libertarian Convention in Orlando this weekend, he's going to be talking about women's rights a lot. On Friday night, I caught up with Johnson, who was in the midst of his final stump speech before the convention kicked off. He was, it turns out, very good at stump speeches. And very good at hearing what libertarian delegates wanted from him. After discussing the transition between a "three-term Democrat," his 2008 campaign, and "a e79caf774b
