My server will send messages to the client over HTTP protocol instead of XMPP. It seems to me that I can tell this from the presence of "Content-type: text/html" in the HTTP headers. XMPP doesn't set these headers so I'm wondering if there is a way to detect if the server will be sending a stream or a full message. If not, is there anyway for me to detect if the server is sending a stream and if I have to read the stream in or close it? A: XEP-0184 provides support for streaming. Client implementations that don't support it are in violation of the protocol,
