A former doctor sued the NHS, saying it violated her Human Rights by not asking questions about the condition. The Supreme Court ruled the doctor could not sue because her right to respect for private life is not absolute It said the case is "one of those rare types of cases in which the court could intervene to refuse to enter a legal order". The case is one of several outraging rights activists. It follows a ruling from the UK's highest court that a man had no right to refuse to allow a male doctor to conduct a "nocturnal emission" examination on him for his wife. The woman, who was seven months pregnant, told doctors she had told her husband but he had refused to conduct a test on her. 'Waste of resources'

The case centred around the way doctors and midwives had interpreted section two of the Human Rights Act. It says: "Everyone has the right to respect for his private and family life, his home and his correspondence."

Firstly, I'd like to say that (no offense meant), I'm a bit stunned by how much mass the OP has lost in their last editing of their question. This is now the second time I had to open an answer, since I only actually saw the edit later when typing my answer. What is your current goal, by asking the same question again?

Furthermore, you seem to have completely ignored the advices given to you. The OP provided a code that isn't working, and they provided a link to relevant software, claiming that it may be run on Windows. I checked that link and you did not seem to have any problem following that. So you basically start asking a question, ignore the (multiple) constructive answers you got, and then ask the same question again, with no further detail. As you've already received a few upvotes and lots of answers, just add the code, be clear about the problem, and that should be it. A: You have two ways to solve this: Using a disassembler such as IDA Download the APK (I would use Open IDA as usual (File -> Open...)) Open the APK Open the dex classifier Select the decompiled class. Once open, select View -> Class

Values Select Category as Super and click the Class Tagger button Type the name of the class and press OK You will see the name of the class and its attributes. Using a decompiler Step 1 Download apktool from Step 2 Open apktool and select the APK Step 3 Open your favourite decompiler such as
