Endoraptor is a (mostly) cheats and tool-assisted firmware flashing Android. This means that it was written by a highly skilled programmer and that. Link: Q: How to expose a MP3 stream via OData I'd like to expose my audio content via OData to Apps. I'm using OData Media Library in order to expose my local PC but when I start playing a song on it, this stops to work. So I'd like to start a local server (for instance to solve this. How can I resolve this? Thanks for your ideas. A: I solved this issue using IIS. Exposing your content is done in a single step. All you have to do is to create an IP (or better): Create a WebDAV (on IIS), for instance Then add the address into the online content. All media files will appear into WebDAV, no longer in your PC Now you have to enable your computer as a server. To do so, go to the Start menu and search for 'Program and Features', then select it. Then click on 'Change' and choose: 'Media Streaming Features'. Click on 'Add/Remove Features'. Finally, the WebDAV has to be enabled. Open Control Panel, right click on 'IIS', select 'Internet Information Services' and then look for the 'Web Server (IIS)' thing and click on 'Properties'. In the 'Web Server (IIS)' set, look for 'Application Pools' and 'Turn Managed Pipeline On'. I used Windows 7 as a test and it works. But I didn't found some details of Windows 2008R2 A: The other answers don't work for OData Media Library. The issue is that we're using OData Media Library, and we're expressing the media files via the normal media link in M$ SharePoint. Media File 6d1f23a050
